Dilemma Of The Ducks . . .

Over the continent, wild ducks and geese are heading an age-old spring to head for their nesting grounds where they will attempt to reproduce their kind. The "Y" of high-fliers or the rush of a flock rising swiftly from the water seldom fails to stir our emotion and admiration, yet what will these birds find this spring as they seek nesting sites?

To put it simply, the ducks are in a dilemma. The situation is grave, in fact, the National Wildlife Federation and its state affiliates have decided it should be featured during the current observance of National Wildlife Week. Theme of the Week, being observed March 18-24 this year, is "Waterfowl for the Future," by Conservation of Wetlands Which Benefit Man and Wildlife.

There is no question that ducks and geese are in severe circumstances. Many authorities say that continental flight migratory waterfowl, once estimated in unnumbered millions, will dwindle to scanty flocks unless positive steps are taken within the next ten years to preserve their habitat. International aspects of the problem complicate a solution.

Many factors are combined to make inroads upon waterfowl populations. As soon as young birds hatched during the summer begin their southward migrations in the fall, they encounter the traditional enter and run the gauntlet of skyward poisons. A greater danger is the more effective illegal traps of the market hunter. Ducks also are an aid of agricultural chemicals and waters polluted by all sorts of wastes, including oil products which render them unable to fly. Disease, inadequate food supplies, and predators also take a toll. In spite of these difficulties, however, waterfowl populations probably would flourish if habitat conditions were favorable, especially on the nesting grounds. Here, in the northern U. S. and in the prairies of Canada, rests the greatest problem.

Drought periodically hits the prairie pothole regions, as in the past few years, and the numbers of ducks decline. For more than two decades now, however, continuous drainage of wetlands is reducing a permanent drought and waterfowl habitat has been reduced to a third of its original size. Then, when natural drought conditions prevail as well, waterfowl numbers dwindle to the point where years are required for recovery. In the U. S., it is an inconsistency of federal government which subsidized drainage of wetlands to continue and create more agricultural land at a time when crop surpluses pose a major national problem. It is doubly inconsistent that one agency of the federal government should stimulate drainage of the waterfowl wetlands that another agency is seeking to acquire.

Clearly, immediate action is necessary to save the ducks and geese because of their tremendous importance to man. The Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife, U. S. Department of the Interior, and state wildlife agencies are busy acquiring wetlands for preservation as nesting, resting, and wintering areas. Funds for the acquisition of these areas come from sportsmen who purchase federal duck stamps and state hunting licenses and sporting arms and ammunition. Much, however, needs to be done in Canada, where 80 per cent of the ducks and geese are produced, where they often are considered nuisances by farmers. Mexico, too, needs encouragement in waterfowl management, especially with the enforcement of hunting regulations. Illegal activities of the "market hunter" in the U. S. also must be stamped out and all of us can help by refusing to buy wild birds.

The best solution to an international problem of this sort appears to be in an international organization composed of representatives of the nations concerned. All of these problems then may be considered and resolved through coordinated efforts for the benefit of all.

The greater part of the contents of the home were destroyed.

Bits O' Talk The Dr. Ralph Steffe family of Flint spent the weekend at their Ausable River home. Conservation Officer Clarence Roberts last week returned a fawn to its natural habitat after having taken it to the Department's Equipment Station for warmth and food. The deer responded within a few hours to the help of man, and when turned loose near a feeding station bounded away from Officer Roberts' car. The deer had been spotted earlier by Milke and Walt Fallon near their Lake Margaret home. The Department was notified of the deer's condition, and it was picked up shortly afterwards. Several deer have been treated in this manner this month, but not all of them were found in time to recover.

Miss Burnis Meech's uncle Charles Fischer went to Chicago for three days to attend the funeral of his brother, Mr. Richard Fischer, on Saturday. Members of Mr. Art Thayer's class in Journalism, ignored the Avalanche office and printing plant Thursday morning.

and 433 in the Senate. These facts indicate how important it is for a legislator to keep his finger on the pulse of the people. We would be legislating nearly out of existence if all bills passed.

One more little story about Con-Con. The following headline appeared in a nearby newspaper: "Legislators: Delegates Criticize Work So Far." This appraisal is not the one I get. In my opinion it does not express the sentiment of the majority of the representatives. How anyone can criticize the amount or quality or sincerity of work of the Con-Con delegates is beyond me. Of course there may be exceptions, but I am aware of them.

The Constitutional Convention has a very difficult, almost impossible, task. Seventy-nine of the eighty-three counties voted not to attempt to rewrite the Constitution, but ones the other four counties provided the majority vote, all counties pitched in and elected capable delegates who have worked hard and long.

The difficulty comes in writing a Constitution that the people will accept. I still think the best way is to revise and approve the Constitution section by section, but a majority of the people voted to attempt to do it en-masse. This fact should give those few counties that voted so overwhelmingly for Con-Con something to think about.

The biggest thing, in my opinion, which big city areas wanted in voting for Con-Con, was to take Representatives and Senators away from northern and rural Michigan and give them to a three or four county area. I am violently opposed to this procedure and next week I hope to tell you why.

The narrative revolves around Franny's nervous breakdown or moral revolt at the world she suddenly sees herself occupying. Her solution, religion, (not per se) is unacceptable to Zoöie as synthetic and unrealistic. His concern with her evasion, and interpretation of her life and it's meaning, is the meat and bone of the book. They both turn eventually to Seymour for a peaceful acceptance.

Mr. Salinger creates powerful and real people. Each word and descriptive gesture adds to the readers growing awareness of these two. His writing is spare, with every unnecessary eliminated, the remainder vivid characterization. The author plans a long term narrative series on the Glass family, some of which has been published in the New Yorker magazine and more of which will appear soon.

The "Catcher in the Rye," Salinger's first book, will be equated with McGuffey's Reader when compared with the memorable "Franny and Zoöie".

This book is available at the Crawford County Library.
